

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A liquid crystal display device displays images by applying an electric field substantially parallel to an insulating substrate between a pixel electrode and a common electrode placed across from each other. The liquid crystal display device has a capacitor terminal connected to the pixel electrode and placed opposite to a capacitor electrode with an insulating layer therebetween. The pixel electrode has at least two voltage supply paths to the capacitor terminal.